About Phoebe Pegram Baughan

“Miss Phoebe,” as she was known to many, was born in Elkin, NC in 1871, and at the age of 25, with only five days of public schooling, was one of the first students at UNCG, then the State Normal and Industrial School. She remained at the school for six years before taking a teaching position in Gastonia, three years prior to her marriage to H.H. Baughan, a public works engineer. While a student, she studied physical culture, and by her fourth year, she was teaching full-time in the field. Most prized among her possessions was a medal presented to her in 1897 to recognize her progress while at college: the Peabody Medal for being the “most deserving student.”

About Phoebe Baughan Barr

Her daughter Phoebe, Class of 1927, was a distinguished dancer and teacher of dance. She was a student in the Denishawn School of Dance and Related Arts in New York, and for four years danced professionally, touring with the Denishawn Dance Company. In 1931, Phoebe married Scott Barr, a promising university professor, and thereafter began a dance teaching career that spanned three states and more than four decades, and left a legacy of highly trained dancers throughout the Southeast, many of whom joined professional dance companies.
